The North East Management Academy (NEMA)

NEMA is a unique consortium. Led by companies in the North East's engineering, manufacturing and science sectors, its mission is to promote excellence in leadership and management.

Launched in October 2009, the initial priority for the Academy is to provide learning and development for team leaders, supervisors and first-line managers.

The Academy is responding to employer demand. It provides an innovative solution to the longstanding challenge of how to meet the training needs of middle managers. Their time is usually considered too essential for productivity to allow any scope for training.

Now, by working as a consortium, employers are able to release their managers in small numbers to form a diverse cohort of learners from different companies. The cohort is large enough in number for management development to take place effectively; and it happens in partnership. The benefits of partnership working are great with learners taking advantage of the unique opportunity to work with their peers in other companies and compare working practice.

This is just one way in which the Academy is supporting business. Your company could enjoy the benefits too.
